PLAYING WITH FIRE

by August Strindberg

Strindberg was visiting friends who had been most kind and helpful, when one of them made an unfortunate remark; the playwright broke off their friendship immediately.

"Playing with Fire" was written in petty, spiteful revenge on the people who had been good to him.

The play was also partially based on the visit which Strindberg made to Baron Wrangel and his wife, ten years earlier, when the Baron was quite willing to let his wife, Siri, sleep with Strindberg.
