One of the plays of the Sixties - about the impact of a homicidal layabout on a seedy household in the provinces.

"STRONG STUFF, STRONG CAST, REAL WIT."
OBSERVER

The Author

Joe Orton was only 34 when in August 1967 he was murdered by his lover Kenneth Halliwell, who subsequently took his own life with an overdose of pills.

Orton left behind a legacy of comic masterpieces, of which 'Entertaining Mr Sloane', 'Loot' and 'What the Butler Saw' are the most celebrated. He certainly could be said to have taken comedy 'Where no writer had gone before'. Judge for yourselves.

The director would like to thank Jane Dewey, Tina Harris and David Wheatley for their help and advice.

Next rehearsed reading Sunday July 8th:
