Betrayal

Peter Gould draws on his experience as a BBC reporter in Northern Ireland during the time of the troubles to give us a vivid picture of conflicting loyalties and their consequences for feelings and actions. There are no easy answers to the dilemmas he makes us encounter. The play warns us that the terrible violence of those years, in a Northern Ireland which for three years was unable to revive its own Government, cannot be assumed to have disappeared forever.

The Stares

An impenetrable experimental play, an enormously self-important actress, a disaffected deputy stage manager and two volunteers plucked from the theatre bar to be extras. And a mobile phone. What could possibly go wrong?
